I love learning about the world around us and how it works; however, I haven't always been – at school I didn't enjoy science and the way it was taught (there were too many diagrams and not enough practise!).

Teaching science, along with discovering it through my own children, has shown me just how incredible it can be (whether an enquiry works or not!), watching those links made and sparks created has fostered a need in me to always question 'why'; something which I try to pass on to both my students and own children.
